Chapter 1 MARINE PASSENGER VESSELS

Establishes an environmental compliance program for commercial passenger vessels operating in the marine waters of the state, including state-operated ferries, if they have at least 50 lower berths for overnight accommodation of passengers. Requires the vessels to register with the state and pay a commercial passenger vessel fee that is intended to cover the operational costs of the state's program. Sets fecal coliform and suspended solids limits for the vessels' discharges of graywater, sewage, and other wastewater, but allows some delay in a vessel's compliance if a plan for interim protective measures is submitted by the vessel. Allows the Department of Environmental Conservation to establish other standards for the discharges. Prohibits vessel discharges of treated sewage, graywater, and other wastewater within one mile of shore unless they meet the much stricter treatment standards set under federal law for near-shore discharges. Establishes other terms and conditions of discharges. Requires the vessels to sample their discharges, report test results to the state, and notify the state whenever discharge limits have been exceeded. Requires the vessels to maintain records for three years about the volume and location of their discharges in state marine waters and to send these records to the state upon request. Requires the vessels to send to the state a copy of discharge and sampling reports prepared for the U.S. Coast Guard. Allows the state to independently monitor and sample the vessels' discharges and verify environmental compliance of the vessels. Requires the vessels to report to the state about discharges or offloading of a hazardous waste or of a hazardous substance generated in the state's marine waters if such a report is required under federal law or Canadian law. Requires the vessels to tell the state their plans for in-state offloading or disposing of nonhazardous solid waste, hazardous waste, and hazardous substances. Establishes civil and criminal penalties applicable to unlawful discharges and inadequate reporting by the vessels. Allows the Department of Environmental Conservation to recognize superior environmental protection efforts by the vessels and to monitor the opacity of air emissions from the vessels. Delays the fee requirement and most of the discharge limitations described above until January 1, 2004, for vessels with fewer than 250 lower berths for overnight accommodation of passengers, but requires them to do the same sampling, testing, and reporting as the larger vessels and to use properly operating marine sanitation devices. Requires the department to submit reports to the governor that, among other things, assess the environmental effects of the vessels' discharges, based on the information available to the department for the next several cruise ship seasons, and recommend future action by the state in relation to the vessels, particularly as to the whether small vessels should be required to meet the same discharge requirements as large vessels after January 1, 2004. (CCS HB 260)
